

The inaugural LOOR short course event was totally amazing. Although we were supposed to be working by showing our truck, we did sneak over to the track and catch most all of the racing. If you have never seen this form of off road racing, you just have to attend the next race on May 2-3. The trucks run so hard and fast that they literally look like "RC cars"; they ascend the jumps at speed, drop the wheels like landing gear of a jet liner, tilt slightly to the side, and soar until you cannot hold your breath any longer then touchdown as graceful as a cat in tall grass. The landing turns into a "slide job" as they smoke into the corner, pitch the truck sideways, run side by side like synchronized swimmers, accelerating towards the next jump where they launch in one direction, land in another and somehow straighten the truck out roaring away in a cloud of dust. Amazing!

LUCAS OIL OFFROAD RACING SERIES INAUGURAL EVENT IS A BLOWOUT!

Back to the business at hand, we were very fortunate as the space where the race coordinators had us show our DeakNBuilt LLC truck was right at the main gate. Needless to say, we had prime exposure and took good advantage of it. We spoke with lots of spectators and met some really great people. It was a good thing, as the crew worked so hard to get the truck show ready since the last "mud race". Many thanks to Raymond, Wes, Jeremy, Trever, Mike, Kent and Big Mike (as well as others that I surely forgot to mention) for the late nights and final "all night" push on getting the truck ready to go. The truck was loaded at 2am Thursday night/Friday morning and delivered to the Primm by 5:30 am the same morning. Ouch... I guess the moral of the story is: Showing the truck is as much work as racing it!

Overall, it was a great weekend! Don't forget the next event will be a fun weekend in Lucerne Valley where we will be doing a little testing and giving some rides in the truck. Bring your off-road toys and camping gear and share the weekend of April 18-19.

Race on!
